

CALL FOR PAPERS:

Child and Family Journal of Innovative Practice and Research

WHO WE ARE

The CFJ provides an integrated practice-research platform for all child and family programs, agencies, and institutions, in the US as well as globally, to share innovative practice and research experiences.

WHAT WE DO

The CFJ aims to provide updated information and innovative practice and research to promote child and family well-being from communities, universities, and clinical or research centers. Scholars and practitioners dedicated to working with children and families — ranging from across Texas to across the globe — contribute knowledge, innovative assessment and intervention, practice insights, service outcomes, policy updates, and sources of professional and educational development.

ISSUE TOPIC

The upcoming issue of CFJ will focus on youth aging out of the foster system. Potential articles could focus on recent news and statistics, interviews highlighting local agencies who help aging-out youth, or literature reviews to find the most effective resources for this population.

INTEGRATED PRACTICE-RESEARCH PLATFORM

The CFJ combines contemporary research in child welfare fields with practice experiences from interdisciplinary professionals.

SUBMISSIONS

are accepted year-round and should be sent to mcheung@uh.edu.

PUBLISHING

The CFJ publishes two free-access issues each year. Issues can be found on the CFJ website below.
